Sailors of Delaware's Crew Purposely Stay Ashore When Vessel Sails.

CHANGES IN INTERIOR DESIGN AT NAVY YARD

After Completion At Local Yard, th Battleship Had Stanchions Tor and Replaced by Butkheads Which, the Tars Say, Make Men's Quarters Almost Uninhabitable.

When the battleship Delawar steamed from Hampton Roads yester-St. Thomas, Panish West in her first voyage since joining score or more of the sailors of he crew behind in this city and Norfolk The tars purposely allowed the veracl to go to sea without them because they claim that the bg fighter is a Curtis, 115 Thirty-fourth street. regular bake oven and that life aboard her is almost unbearable.

The interior design of the Delaware differs from that of any other battle is divided up into small compartments by ulkheads, which were built after the ship was tarned the ship was turned ever guest to the navy department at the End. Norfolk navy yard. When completed here, the Delaware had stanchions to support the decks in the crew's compartments, but these were torn out and bulkheads substituted with the view of making the vessel stronger and better enable her to stand the shock of the firing of her ten 12-inch

The sailors say that in designing the Delaware the omeia's of the navy department were considering only how to mount ten 12-nch guns of the ship and give her enough boliers and big enough engines to drive her at 21 knots speed.

The comfort of the men on board, they say, was not considered.
